Ultimately, in the play Oedipus Rex, Sophocles uses motifs to show Oedipus's capability to rescue the country and the Thebans' trust in him since he saved them from the sphinx; nevertheless, the playwright incorporates dramatic irony to foreshadow Oedipus's downfall which emphasizes that people's desires never precede the gods' will. Sophocles creates dramatic irony when Oedipus declares that god will curse the murderer of Laius, so that the audience feel anxious when they know who ...

The story line continues in Oedipus at Colonus. In the second play of the trilogy, Oedipus is exiled from Thebes. After years of wandering with his daughter Antigone, Oedipus arrives at a grove in Colonus, a village near Athens. In the meantime, Oedipus' sons -- each claiming the right to the throne of Thebes -- prepare to go to war.

Quotes - Oedipus Rex. "Who seeks shall find; who sits with folded hands or sleeps is blind." (Sophocles, 4) This quote means that if you wish and try hard to find something you will find it but if you sit down with your hands folded you will never find what you want and it will escape. This quote is important because Oedipus wants to find Laius killer and then that's when Creon says who seek shall find; who sits with folded hands or sleeps is blind and he says that to Oedipus because ...

During the entire play, the main character, Oedipus, suffers from all types of irony ranging from verbal, to situational, to dramatic. Oedipus' becoming of a victim irony pushes him into a corner so tight, he sees no way out. Verbal irony is exemplified in the play of Oedipus Rex. The statement made by Oedipus at the beginning of the play, "Then once more I must bring what is dark to light" (Oedipus Rex, Prologue, line 134) is a prime example of one saying things they do not mean.
